

Nicole Reese

RESEARCHER · REGENERATIVE DESIGNER · COMMUNITY BUILDER

Nicole Reese is an anthropologist, regenerative designer, and community builder whose work sits at the intersection of field research and systems design. She is founder of Terrenity, her research platform and consulting practice, and co-founder of Village Portal. She is a practitioner who has studied societal redesign across 100+ communities in 12 countries, and supported over 16 regenerative community projects in Mexico, Central America, Europe, and North America.

Signature Talks

Build the Village, Starve the Empire

Ecovillages as societal redesign at local scale — why the village is not a retreat from the world but a proof of concept for it. A call to action for builders, not consumers.

Why Modern Communities Keep Failing — and How to Build Ones That Last

An honest account of the structural conditions that determine whether an intentional community survives its first decade, based on field research across four continents.

The Regenerative Development: A New Model for the Village Economy

How a new generation of founders is refusing to choose between financial viability and values alignment — and what their model demands to succeed.

Village Building in a Modern Context

A systems-based introduction to regenerative community design: land, economics, governance, and cultural resilience for practitioners at every stage.
